TSUL

Tashkent State University of Law (TSUL) actively engages in policy-focused research through collaboration with various government departments. Our joint research projects with ministries and agencies include studies on legislative reforms, improvements in legal education, and analyses of the legal system's efficiency. TSUL faculty and research centers frequently serve in advisory roles, providing expert opinions and contributing to the drafting of legal frameworks alongside government bodies.

In addition, TSUL has partnered with government agencies to develop new policies, such as anti-corruption measures, judicial reforms, and human rights initiatives. We also conduct workshops, training programs, and seminars for government officials and policymakers, aiming to enhance their understanding of legal practices and emerging laws.

Issues of expanding cooperation with reputable international organizations and universities were discussed

Moreover, TSUL representatives actively participate in national committees and legislative task forces, contributing to the review and drafting of policies. Through these consultative roles, we work closely with the Ministry of Justice and other bodies to shape legal and policy decisions in Uzbekistan.

WE ANALYSE

Our research outcomes have also had a tangible impact on policy-making, with findings informing legislative changes and guiding the adoption of new policies. This demonstrates TSUL's commitment to leveraging academic expertise to shape and improve governmental policies.
